Albedo, the White, is like a totally gross state to be in, you know? It's like when those alchemy dudes get all obsessed with turning stuff white. But let me tell you, that's not what real alchemy is about, man. Real alchemy is about transforming things, like turning lead into gold or whatever. It's like comparing a passenger on a river barge to a badass explorer from the Golden Age. Or building the Pyramids versus making some basic wooden house. You feel me?

So, this Albedo thing is supposed to be the second stage of the alchemical process. It's like when the stuff you're working on is all poisoned or messed up, and you gotta purify it and get rid of the bad vibes. Everything turns all white, like a sunrise after a creepy night in a spooky forest. But here's the thing, that white stuff is just inert, man. Nothing cool or transformative about it. It's like splitting things into good and bad parts and only keeping the boring white stuff. Lame, right?

Real alchemy is all about the transformation, dude. It's about changing the essence of things and making them totally rad. It's a hard and crazy journey, full of battles with dragons and all that epic stuff. And love, man, love is like the wildest and most transformative force of all. When two things come together in love, it's like a super intense alchemical union. But it's not easy, man. It can mess you up big time. You gotta be willing to suffer and go through some serious struggles.

And let me tell you about Mars, bro. Mars is all about power and separation. It's like a ferocious beast that can mess you up real bad. But if you can handle it and perfect it, it becomes this crazy powerful sword, like nothing can stand in its way. It's like the ultimate bad boy, you know?

So yeah, alchemy is all about the wild journey of transformation. It's not about just turning stuff white or collecting inert things. It's about unleashing the power within and creating something totally mind-blowing. That's the real deal, man.
